

A Global Education Program Featuring in UN SDGs with PBL

Are you an aspiring teacher or parent with a heart of passion and an adventurous spirit? Please lead your students or kids and spearhead this enlightening and entertaining program.

Objective:

We nurture problem-solving abilities, expose students to a broader global perspective, and emphasize practical and authentic learning. We would like to actively mingle students of various nationalities, geographic origins, and cultural backgrounds. Above all, we incorporate project-based learning and work on UN SDGs in a global context.

Learning Tasks:

Students in different countries will discuss and share online about the ways to address global issues, including environmental protection, human rights, and habitat conservation. They will learn with and from one another in the mode of online Simulated Micro-UN in the program, which is created based on the project-based learning (PBL) strategy.

Target Audiences:

1. Teachers of K-12 schools from any countries around the globe, who will lead their students to participate in the program as a group.
2. Students from K-12 schools or homeschooled students, under the auspices of parents or guardians, with fundamental English language skills are also welcome to initiate a group of 5 in the minimum.
3. Students in the age of K-12 could also join the program individually as a student journalist.

For further detailed information, please send an email to apec.best@msa.hinet.net .